

3 Mistakes You Shouldn't Make When Trying to Get Your Ex Back

Much like a car crash, a breakup is rough and may cause you to do something irrational because you're not thinking.

A breakup is like a car crash. Not just a fender bender but also a real incident that leaves everybody shaken up. After the accident you're not sure what happened or what to do now. Much like a car crash, a breakup is rough and may cause you to do something irrational because you're not thinking. However, if you know what to do before an incident, it's a lot easier to stay calm and focused when the time comes.

Stay away from the phone and ignore the midnight desires of calling your ex to tell him you miss him. Calling and spilling all your emotions only shows how truly vulnerable you are and, quite frankly, that is a big turn off for a guy. While a guy wants to know you depend on him, he usually also wants a girl that can stand on her own two feet. Girls are the same way when it comes to guys. Yes, she likes to know how she cared for you and appealed to you, but she doesn't want the burden of living your life for you, which is how it seems when you call and act as desperate as you feel.

Texting, emailing, Instant Messaging, leaving voicemail and any other forms of communication you use to get back in touch with your ex is also bad. You're not giving him/her the space he/she needs and that makes them angry and even more confident that he/she was right in leaving you. With the constant messaging, your ex is going to avoid you even more.

Physical relationships after a breakup are always a bad idea because it leaves one party without any consequences while the other party is left taking all the weight of the breakup - and it's usually the one that broke up with the other that doesn't feel any consequences. It should be the other way around. Yes, you're hurt if you were the one left on the side of the road while your partner decided to move on but the pain will subside faster if you're not holding on the bumper being dragged along. End all forms of communication, even this one. In the end, you'll both be better for it.
