As soon as December starts, even mid-November for some, a feeling of dread comes for many people – how to get over the hurdles of Christmas and New Year parties. For others, it is how to have a good time at these partying without looking like a total prat.

There are a few main reasons for these feelings. Let us look at some in detail.

How many times have we ended up making a drunken fool out of ourselves? How many of us have frisked the opposite sex, who may be our work colleagues, only to wake up regretting our actions? And let's forget that drunken brawl that always erupts when there is free flowing booze. It is even worse when that brawl has been with your boss. You really cannot face him/her when you go to work now, can you? The thing is that alcohol that you have been glugging for the last two hours has made your tongue loose and you say all the things to your boss which you really wanted to tell him when he discussed your performance, or lack off at that team meeting.

Christmas is a time of merrymaking and we all let our hair down and chill. Some of us let our hair down more than usual and that is when we end up saying and doing things that we later regret.
